Once done, you can enjoy internet activity privately. One of the best free VPN providers is Private Internet Access. You can try out its VPN service for 30 days before making the subscription. Watch the slowdowns If you really want to Clean your browser's cache. It may seem a little odd, but your browser's cache can play a big part in how it performs, and that includes how fast it is for you to surf the Internet. To make your browser work, it needs to make sure that it has the information that it needs for the website that you are visiting, and it does that by storing web pages that you've viewed in its cache. So, you might be thinking that you don't need to clean the cache, but remember that your browser stores sensitive information for you. If hackers get hold of it, or if they infect the server, they could use your private data for various bad reasons, including identity theft. Plus, the information that you store in your browser's cache can actually slow your browsing and the time it takes for you to visit your favorite sites. Uninstalling the cache on your operating system will clean up your cache for that particular browser and cause its performance to increase. If you want to do a complete clean-out, follow the steps below. Note that clearing the cache doesn't actually delete your browser's history of web pages you have visited. You'll have to clear the browser's history, too. Clear the cache by selecting "Clear Recent History" from the "Website Settings" menu in your browser.

Schedule automatic program updates. If your computer is connected to the Internet, then it could be vulnerable to malware, viruses, bugs, and other types of threats that can be used by hackers to gain control of it. You need to ensure that your software is updated and running the latest version to keep your system protected against the latest threats that hackers can launch against it.
