Degradation of phenanthrene by the bacterial strain Actinomadura toluolica: toxicity, degradation products and reaction pathways. In this study, the ability of the bacterial strain Actinomadura toluolica to degrade phenanthrene and its toxicity to S. aureus were investigated. The results indicated that the strain degraded phenanthrene rapidly in both liquid and solid media, yielding cis-1,2-dihydroxybiphenyl and 1-methylnaphthalene in amounts of 35.7 and 6.9 mg/L, respectively, after 2.5 d of incubation. These results were comparable to those of the well-known phenanthrene-degrading bacteria Sphingomonas paucimobilis. The relative toxicity of phenanthrene to S. aureus was significantly decreased by the biodegradation of phenanthrene by A. toluolica. Toxicity was measured by a biosensor consisting of the luxAB operon from Vibrio fischeri in S. aureus. Additionally, degradation products of the phenanthrene biodegradation were identified by HPLC, UPLC-mass spectrometry and NMR. The products identified were tyrosine, catechol, resorcinol and 2-hydroxyphthalic acid. The results suggested that the degradation products were responsible for the decreased toxicity of the strain to S. aureus. In addition, the proposed reaction pathways of the degradation of phenanthrene by
