If you simply want to view a single news headline along with the source, and do not have any interest in combining the news or creating custom news alerts, this is an excellent TTS software option for reading headlines, especially when using multiple news sources. One of its benefits is that it's free and can be downloaded using the Windows start menu. It's available in a variety of different flavours including it's very own Windows Media Player, which was launched in 2001 and is now powered by Microsoft. As well as a desktop version, Media Player also offers a mobile version which works on iPhones and Android phones. Google Play Music is a service available on both iOS and Android platforms. Google Play Music officially launched on the Microsoft Windows platform in 2015. It replaces Microsoft's Media Player as the default music player in Windows 10 but has not been built into Windows Media Player. The software, which is officially called Windows Media Player 12, is free to download from the Windows Store and you also have the option to purchase the application in the store. Microsoft has done a good job at making its music player look nice and clean but it does cost around $5 to download the software. A large part of the price is due to the application's size. This app is 800Mb in size and includes a lot of features making it one of the most complex free applications you will ever run. In order to run Windows Media Player, it will need to be installed on your computer alongside Windows Media Player 12. This means that if you have installed Windows Media Player from the start menu you will need to uninstall it and then reinstall Windows Media Player 12 to use it. One
