Rip jpg PDF without Adobe Acrobat Reader's death, his assistant George Rogers Clark sought to find a more respectable way to carry out the mission, and he proposed to the Virginians for a coalition with the British forces under General John Forbes, leaving future confrontations with the Iroquois to the American army. The plan was received poorly by the colonial authorities in Virginia, who urged the Virginia House of Burgesses to appoint "a fit person" to bear the proposed message to Iroquois leaders. Governor Dinwiddie chose George Washington to deliver the message. After his victory over the French at the Battle of the Monongahela, which ended the French and Indian War, Washington had a formal audience with the Iroquois in Albany in 1754, two years after the conference at The Cedars. With good French and Indian allies nearby, the Iroquois had begun to relinquish the Albany conferences, and the Virginians began to re-establish their alliance with the confederacy. Washington joined with Iroquois leaders in the Cherry Valley Massacre in February 1754, and later in the Sullivan Expedition. Washington invited them to become an ally in an alliance with the British, but they turned down this overture. In October 1754, Washington also negotiated with the Iroquois to fix the boundary of the Iroquois' reservation in New York
